PowerMill - open/close/lock/unlock/wait for end.Q: Is it possible to use the "increment and attach" method of std::list without deallocating the node? I'm using std::list and the "increment and attach" method to add data to the list. The node I am adding to the list is subsequently destroyed after the list is finished using the list::remove method. std::list list; list.push_back("hello"); list.push_back("bye"); std::list::iterator it; it = list.begin(); // No need to deallocate the node if the list was "increment and attach". list.remove(it); However, if list.remove(it); is not used, the node is destroyed and the destructor for std::string calls delete [] on the string "hello". Is it possible to use the "increment and attach" method without deallocating the node? A: Sure you can. The second argument to the method is a list iterator (the first one being a pointer to the head of the list). Simply check whether it is a valid iterator, if it isn't, check whether the node still exist. If it doesn't, you can indeed delete the string. Q: Is "on fire" a proper usage? After I read a web article, "Fire. How to put it out," I wanted to check to see if the 1cdb36666d
